

The Prevention Practitioners Network

Mission:

The Prevention Practitioners Network is a national network of interdisciplinary professionals dedicated to preventing targeted violence, terrorism, and their impacts within the United States.

Background:

Established through a partnership between the McCain Institute, the Anti-Defamation League, and the Institute for Strategic Dialogue, this network aims to increase the efficacy of locally based prevention and intervention programs and, where appropriate, expand referrals to qualified programs.

The architecture and implementation of this network has been made possible through funding from the Department of Homeland Security's Targeted Violence and Terrorism Prevention Grant Program.

Public Relations Committee

The Public Relations Committee works to ensure the Prevention Practitioners Network builds strong and strategic relationships with both current and future stakeholders. Among other activities, this will be achieved through:

- public education initiatives;
- community outreach; and
- public policy advocacy.

The Public Relations Committee works closely with members of the Network, the Network's Chair, Advisory Board and Administrator to promote services to the community and key stakeholders, and to develop criteria to identify and develop new opportunities for partnership.
